Reproof, reprehension, rebuke, and reprimand, are all expressive of disapprobation of something that has been done, and are personal, being addressed to individuals inferior in age or station. Censure has less of personality, as a public man or a public body, or their acts, may be censured by individuals or in the newspapers. A reproof is administered by a parent to his child, by a master to his servant. Rebuke is a stronger term than reproof, and is administered at the time of the commission of the offence. Reprehension is a more general term than reproof, and persons of all ages and stations are liable to it. Reprimand is an official act, and is administered to a subordinate by one who is invested with authority. Remonstrance and expostulation are more argumentative than the other words, and imply an attempt to dissuade the object from some action or proceeding. A remonstrance is commonly addressed to a superior or to a public body; an expostulation, to an equal or an inferior. It may be said, "His conduct deserves censure; for he acted as he did in spite of the remonstrances (or expostulations) of his friends". gerning, f. i moral. bem. action; eljest act, deed; afv. feat, achievement, work; ibl. performance; ngn gång office [Syn. An act is the single thing done, or what is done by a single effort; an action may consist of more acts than one, or embrace the causes and consequences of the action. Hence it is that the term act is more proper than action, where it is so defined as to imply what is single and simple; as, an act of authority, an act of folly, and the like; but otherwise the word action is to be preferred, where the moral conduct or character is in question. We may enumerate particular acts of a person's life, as illustrative of certain traits in his character, or certain circumstances in his life; but to speak at large of his actions would be to describe his character. Act and deed are both employed for what is done, but acte refers to the power exerted, and deed to the work performed; as a voluntary or involuntary act, a good or a bad deed. Feat is commonly applied to such performances as require strength and activity of the body. Exploit and achievement, without an epithet, are used in a good sense; and an achievement is more than exploit]; en god ~, a good deed; på bar ~, se under bar; gjord ~, deed done; gjord ~ kan icke ändras, what is done cannot be helped; visa i ~, show by (ell. in) deed. -sman, m. doer, perpetrator; afv. culprit; ibl. principal [= tjelfva ~men till skillnad från accessory ell. abettor].

glad, adj. i allm. merry [m. company, girl, day, Christmas]; afv. joyful, joyous båda läst om sak; relativt glad, pleased, delighted alla tre läst om person; ej mörk eller dyster cheerful, cheery, blithe, bright, light-hearted; om person, sällskap o. d. gay, sprightly, brisk, festive, convivial, jovial, genial, boon, bonny sk.; med bibegrepp af lättsinnig gay, cadgy; lbl. fain; bildl. smileful, playful [Syn. Glad denotes either a partial state, or a permanent and habitual sentiment; in the former sense it is most nearly allied to pleased; in the latter sense to joyful and merry. Glad and pleased are both applied to the ordinary occurrences of the day; but the former denotes rather a lively and momentary sentiment, the latter a gentle but rather more lasting feeling; we are glad to see a friend; we are glad to have good intelligence from our friends and relatives; we are glad to get rid of a troublesome companion; we are pleased to have the approbation of those we esteem; we are pleased to hear our friends well spoken of; we are pleased with the company of an intelligent and communicative person. Glad is less vivid than joyful, and more so than cheerful. Glad is seldom applied as an epithet to qualify things except in the scriptural or solemn style, as glad tidings of great joy; joyful is seldomer used to qualify persons than things; hence we speak of joyful news, joyful occurrence, joyful sounds. Cheerful is employed to designate the state of the mind or the property of the thing; we speak of cheerful disposition, a cheerful person, a cheerful society, a cheerful face, a cheerful sound, a cheerful aspect, and the like. — A cheerful person smiles; one who handel, m. 1. i vidsträcktaste bem. dealings, commerce, intercourse, traffic; ~ och vandel, dealings and doings; ways and doings. 2. varuutbyte, abstrakt trade, commerce; ~ med, på, commerce with, on; ~ med, i, trade in; dealing in; traffic in; ~ mellan, commerce between; konkret trade between, traffic between [Syn. The leading idea in trade is that of carrying on business for purpose of gain; commerce, traffic, and dealing are but modes of trade: commerce is a mode of trade by exchange; traffic is a sort of personal trade, a sending from hand to hand; dealing is a bargaining or calculating kind of trade. Trade is either on a large or small scale; commerce is always on a large scale: we may trade retail or wholesale; we always carry on commerce by wholesale: trade is either within or without the country; commerce is always between different countries: there may be a trade between two towns; but there is commerce between Sweden and England: hence it arises that the general term trade is of inferior import when compared with commerce. The commerce of a country, in the abstract and general sense, conveys more to our mind, and is a more noble expression, than the trade of a country, as the merchant ranks higher than the tradesman, and a commercial house than a trading concern. Trade may be altogether domestic, and betwixt neighbours; the traffic is that which goes backward and forward betwixt two towns or cities, as betwixt Stockholm and the capitals of the different countries. Trade may consist simply in buying and selling according to a stated valuation, dealings are carried on in matters that admit of a variation: hence we speak of dealers in wool, in corn, seeds, and the like, who buy up portions of these goods, more or less, according to the state of the market.]; motsv. adj. commercial [c. education, people, speculations, world, nation, relations, concerns, house], mercantile [m. house, town, situation, nations, class, morality; partly m., partly military] [Syn. Mercantile respects the actual transaction of business or a transfer of merchandize by sale or purchase; commercial comprehends the theory and practice of commerce.]; inhemsk ~, home (ell. domestic, inland) trade; ~n med utlandet, the foreign trade; ~ som ligger i utländingens händer, passive trade; liflig ~, lively (ell. roar-harmoni, f. harmony sfv. mus.; bildl. sfv. concord, agreement, accordance [Syn. The idea of union is common to harmony and concord, but under different circumstances. Concord is generally applied for the unions of wills and affections; harmony respects the aptitude of minds to coalesce. In music harmony signifies the suiting or adapting different modulated sounds to each other. Melody signifies any measured or modulated sounds measured after the manner of verse into distinct members or parts, and is therefore to harmony as a part to the whole: we must first produce melody by the rules of art; the harmony which follows must be regulated by the ear: there may be melody without harmony but there cannot be harmony without melody. Accordance is, strictly speaking, the property on which both melody and harmony is founded, for the whole of music depends on an accordance of sounds. The same distinction marks accordance and harmony in the moral application. There may be occasional accordance of opinion or feeling; but harmony is an entire accordance in every point.]; i ~ med, in harmony (ell. keeping) with. -era, intr. harmonize bildl. -ka, f. harmonica, harmonicon®. -kord, m. harmonichord. -lag, m. law of harmony. -lära, f. harmonics. -musik, m. band-music; god ~ medföljer, i annonser vanl. excellent band. -sk, adj. harmonious; sfv. musical. -skt, adv. harmoniously. -st, m. harmonist. -um, n. harmonium.

Land, country, region, soil, and ground are sometimes used promiscuously; but land refers more especially to soil and ground of the earth, and country to the parts of the earth inhabited. Region is a tract of land of indefinite extent; district, a territory within fixed limits. We say native land, country, or soil; cultivate or till the land, soil, or ground. The term land, therefore, in its proper sense, excludes the idea of habitation; the term country excludes that of the earth or the part of which it is composed. Happy conveys the idea of that which is abstractedly good. A man is happy in his marriage, in his connections, and the like. It excludes the idea of chance. Fortunate applies to that which is deemed beyond human control and what is agreeable to one's wishes. It excludes the idea of personal effort. A man is fortunate in his trading. Successful denotes that effective human effort has been made to gain the object. Prosperous has very much the meaning of successful, but is applied rather to a series of things than a single event, while lucky is something sudden, unaccountable, and singular: a circumstance is said to be fortunate which turns up suitably to our purpose; it is said to be lucky when it comes upon us unexpectedly. Fortuitous is employed only in matters of chance generally and indifferently. Those things are auspicious which are casual, or only indicative of good. Those, which contribute to the satisfaction of people, are propitious.
